THEME DESCRIPTION:

Planning researchers and practitioners share a common quest to explore and develop the knowledge and instruments necessary for the realization of sustainable urban areas. Planning for sustainable urban areas – our general theme – therefore implies experimentation as well as the careful evaluation of (strategic) planning and design efforts. The AESOP workshop (June 20) and paper session (June 22) both aim to discuss such efforts. You are cordially invited to contribute to the workshop and/or paper session by submitting a written paper and providing a presentation. Our main interests are focused on the role planners can or should play in sustainable urban development. What can planners do to increase the chance for sustainable solutions to urban problems and stimulate other actors to help realize them? All experiences with regard to the role of spatial planners in sustainable urban development are welcome. Examples of collaborative initiatives between the public and private sphere are of special interest. Everyone is also very welcome to contribute to the discussions during the whole MISBE2011 conference.

THEME CHARACTER:

The workshop and general session is profoundly interdisciplinary in nature. We seek to engage researchers and practitioners from various fields related to the planning, design, and construction of the built environment. Our aim is maximum interaction by combining short, to the point presentations with a room for discussion and debate.
